SECRETARY LOEB "BIFFS" A DETECTIVE

Obstreperous Kansas Sleuth Given His Quietus.

BATTLE NEAR BIRMINGHAM

At Carlisle, Ark., President in Pajamas,
Covered by Rain Coat, Addressed Crowd.

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 25.—With the President of the nation talking to a cheering crowd at Carlisle, this State, with a rain coat thrown over pajamas, and his private secretary, Loeb, giving a local detective the jiu jitsu with his fist just before, at Birmingham, marks one of the sensations of Mr. Roosevelt's trip.

The battle royal came about in this way: Just before the train left Birmingham last night Secretary Loeb and a local detective had an argument, which resulted to the sleuth's discomfort.

Detective Rushed Up. The detective rushed up to the President's carriage in the gloom and the Secretary warned him away. "I'm a Secret Service man," cried the stranger.

"I don't care who you are," replied the Secretary. "You must not get too close to the President."

The man advanced in spite of the warning and received a staggering blow from the Secretary's fist. He made a misdirected kick at the Secretary's shins which struck nothing more solid than the crowd uttering maledictions.

The President's train reached Fort Roots at 9:15, when the Executive made an address in the city park, after which he was entertained at luncheon.

At Little Rock. President Roosevelt and party arrived here shortly after 9 o'clock this morning, and were greeted at the station by several thousand people. He will remain in this city till 2 o'clock this afternoon, when he will again take the train for Memphis.

Arrival at Carlisle. President Roosevelt made his first appearance in Arkansas at Carlisle, clad in a rain coat. A large crowd of people and a steady downpour of rain greeted him. It was the first rain he had encountered on his present trip, but it neither dampened the ardor of the crowd nor chilled his own spirits. He was dressing when the little town was reached, and at first did not intend to go out on the platform, for there was no stop scheduled there. But the country folk for miles around knew that the engine of the President's train would stop there for water, and sent an urgent message to Secretary Loeb asking that they be given an opportunity of hearing the Executive. In some unaccountable manner the telegram did not reach the secretary until after the President had retired for the night after his hard day's work in Alabama, and Mr. Loeb did not feel justified in awakening him. As the train stopped at Carlisle, a crowd let loose a chorus of cheers, a whistle somewhere in the neighborhood set up an awful screaming, and the President had no doubt that a large portion of his constituency was demanding his presence.

He sent for Secretary Loeb and asked him the name of the town and the cause of the unscheduled demonstration.

Rain Coat Over Pajamas. "They are expecting to see you, Mr. Roosevelt," replied Mr. Loeb, and then explained the situation.

"But I'm not dressed; I'm not fit to be seen. I can't appear in pajamas," exclaimed the President.

"Why not put on a rain coat?" asked the secretary, and the President did. A few minutes before the train reached Fort Roots, near Little Rock, the President and members of his party were photographed. Two pictures were taken.

ROADS TO GOVERN RATE CONVENTION

Believed They Have Captured Chicago Meeting.

ANY ACTION INEFFECTIVE

President's Friends Say Southern Speeches Have Put Issue Entirely in Congress.

The efforts of the railroads and other interests opposed to the President's plan and policy of rate legislation to capture the interstate commerce law convention, which meets in Chicago tomorrow, are not disturbing the peace of mind of the President's supporters. They believe the fight must be fought out in the Houses of Congress and they are convinced that it will be won.

A few months ago they thought that an adverse report from the convention, on increasing the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission would have been fatal to legislation, but have changed their minds because of the President's speeches in the course of his present Southern tour.

Railroads Hustle.

The railroads do not agree with this view of the situation. To their mind the dictum of the Chicago convention will have a potent influence upon legislation. They have rallied their forces for the capture of the delegates and it would not be at all surprising if the convention should adopt resolutions which deny the need of rate legislation, or else ask for legislation of a character unobjectionable to the railroads.

The latest convert is H. D. Loveland, of San Francisco, who was president of the convention last year.

Loveland does not think now that the Each-Townsend bill should be passed—or anything like it. He has become convinced that "public sentiment is moving away from the idea of radical changes in the present law."

One of those most closely allied with the campaign for Government supervision of rate making said this morning:

"It does not distress us at all that the railroads and the allies they have favored may capture the Chicago convention. Beef packers, for instance, are shippers and entitled to participate in meetings of the shipping interests. They do not desire any change in existing law."

"The same thing is true of other great industries to which favors have been shown by the railroads. These favored interests will be represented at Chicago and it is within the bounds of probability that their influence will prevail."
